Located in Oakland, California, Vegan Mob serves vegan BBQ and soul food. One of their much-loved dishes is the "barbequito" which is a tortilla that's stuffed with vegan brisket, Mob sauce, macaroni, barbecue baked beans, slaw and guacamole. The barbecue seasoned fries are also a big hit.

Executive chef, CEO and founder Toriano Gordon loves bringing all his dishes to life in a plant-based form, and that passion shows in all of the tasty menu items.

Fast Food's Biggest Innovators Right Now Are Independent Black Vegan Chefs

With veganized takes on gumbo, po'boys, chicken wings, and more, these chefs are at the forefront of casual vegan dining in America—creating a plant-based approach to classic Black American dishes.

In Oakland, there are consistently lines of customers wrapping around the block, eager to try the local favorites at Vegan Mob. Toriano Gordon, the vegan BBQ and soul food restaurant's owner, believes that restaurants like his are a gateway to vegan cuisine for customers who want to enjoy a fast meal without taking on the health risks often associated with traditional fast food. There's fried lumpia stuffed with Impossible meat, onions, and spices; a plant-based nacho cheesesteak; and candied yams brushed with a hint of cinnamon. Providing what he sees as an alternative to non-vegan fast-food options, Gordon says, "I like to say that we combat what McDonald's has."
